INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION. What an East Orange Public School has been doing the past year

Last Saturday afternoon a numerous throng of visitors might have been seen wending their way along the path that leads from Main street to the stone steps of one of the East Oringe Public School buildings, known as Eastern School, of which Mr. Vernon L. Davey is principal. The occasion was an Industrial Exhibition, a display of work done by the schol' ars, extending in all its branches from the laboratory and mill to the parlor and kitchen. In response to an invitation printed by one of the pupils, our reporter joined the throng and entered the building.

There was work in every department, representing almost every pupil in that department. Beginning at the lowest the visitors were conducted from one room to another until they finally reached the High School department.

The primary children had arranged bits of colored eard-board, little strips of wood and pieces of wire on the tops of their desks. Walking to the back of the room and turning toward the teacher, so that a full view of the surface of the desks could be obtained, it was perceived that all these were arranged so as to represent some object, such as hearts. crosses, squares and various other figures.

A table was filled with specimens of needle-work, both plain an I fancy, toys, ladders and little boats, displaying constructive talent; also drawings and writing.

Cards were placed about the room on which was arranged in different colored papers, some design worked out by the pupils. A picture on one of the blackboards, representing a ship at sea, with colored crayon, was the word of a little boy. All this was done by children 5 and 6 years old.

In the second primary department, the children being 6 and 7 years old, slates were placed on the desks showing specimens of hand-writing. The table contained articles of needle-work, aprons, dolls' clothes and hats, blocks of patchwork, stand-covers, crazy quilts, and other kinds of handiwork. A drawing done in colored erayon, representing a horse in the act of running, was well executed by a boy of 6.

The exhibit of the third primary department was like the others, only showing more advancement. In fact this advancement from year to year throughout the whole exhibit was very marked. In addition to these, however, there was a conversion of peach baskets into a unique design of waste-paper basket, embroidered stand-covers, cushions worked in crazy patch, fancy whisk broom-holders and dolls' clothes. On the black board were specimens of free hand drawing, writing and designing. The average age of the children was from 7 to 8 years.

In the fourth primary the black boards were filled with designs in angular and circular figures, being original work of the pupils, who were 8 and 9 years old. Among the objects of special interest on the table were an old fashioned mat made by an 8 year old girl, blocks of patch work representing all the different styles of quilts, aprons, napkins, towels and other useful articles, and a large amount of fancy needle-work. A crayon sketch illustrating a naval engagement attracted a great deal of attention. In all the grammar departments the display of fancy work was a very prominent feature of the exhibit. Rugs, mats, scarfs, stand-covers, cushions, shoe-bags, pin-cushions, lamp-mats, fancy slippers match-safes and many other things, useful and ornamental about the home, filled

There were handsomely colored vases, ornamented with floral designs, in relief, modeled from the clay by the scholars' own hands, and burned under their personal supervision. Artificial flowers, bead work, lace work, engraving done on cakes of soap, card work, mottoes, work baskets, wall-brackets, and various other articles loaded the tables.

In one department was a miniature park constructed by a little boy; the park enclosed a lake, on the surface of which was a small boat partially hidden by a little boat house. Secluded in a shady nook on the bank of the lake a frog was quietly meditating.

Among the many interesting objects to be seen in the rooms assigned to the High School department, was a small fountain emi ting a tiny jet. A close inspection falls to reveal any outside connection from which the fountain may draw its supply. Examination shows that the fountain is practically a self-feeder. This ingenious pleed of mechanism, the hand-work of a school boy 15 years of age, illustrates the elementary principles of hydraulies, in a mariner easily comprehended by the young

In this same department the process of distillation was being carried on by means of a contrivance involving all the important principles of the still, constructed and operated by two young scholars. The principal parts of it being glass the whole operation was visible to the eye.

The electrical display offorded considerable amusement, a battery of sufficient strength to give a perceptible shock to 6 men being in operation. Electric bells, different methods of producing electricity, devices for indicating the direction of the current, and for illustrating its positive and negative qualities, were displayed. These devices and applications were all displaying a wonderful proficiency in this line. Small models, constructed by members of the philosophy class were shown, representing the lever, plane, wheel, screw and pulley, and serving to illustrate the varied applications of the principle of virtual velocities. Additional attractions in the department were found in excellent specimens of photography, lithography, engraving and printing. Suspended from the wall were maps drawn by pupils, on which were indicated, by heavy lines, the different time-meridians used by the railroads in various sections of the country. Two anatomical plates were also placed against the wall one illustrating the circulating organs the other the digestive organs.

The black boards in the different de partments of the school were well filled with specimens of writing, free hand drawing, decorative designs, and problems in arithmetic fully worked out. On tables were placed what was termed "relief maps done in putty, to show the topography of countries. Toys, small ships, ladders, boot-jacks and a small hen coop, evidenced the development of constructive abilities.

Amateur experiments in the line of duties that fall to the lot of the economical house-wife were displayed in the shape of dresses, aprons, stockings towels napkins, etc. A well-made pair of pants, suitable for a boy about 6 years of age, attracted a great deal of attention.

A table heavily laden with the good things of life attracts the attention. Conspicuous among these is a vivid reminder of Christmas holidays in a roasted turkey, brown and crisp, handsomely decorated in the usual holiday fashion. The indispen' sable staff of life was represented by samples of home-made bread, evincing skill on the part of the baker. Our reporter wished to try its quality, but it was intimated that should he do so, there would be none left for exhibition.

It should be stated, in conclusion, that the work, from the primary department to the highest, was all done by the pupils themselves.
